The BC government reports that 19% of B.C. high school students identify as gay, lesbian, bisexual or not exclusively heterosexual. *Prior to the implementation of SOGI 123 there were ZERO trans students and the LGBTQ were approximately .001% of the population. <https://news.gov.bc.ca/factsheets/sexual-orientation-and-gender-identity-sogi-in-schools>

Report: Re-examining the Evidence on Comprehensive Sexuality Education 2019

<https://action4canada.com/wp-content/uploads/re-examining-the-evidence-for-cse-in-schools-2019.pdf>

CSE is causing considerable harm to students. Teaching abstinence is proving successful

PROGRAM SUCCESS VERSUS FAILURE: A global success ratio, estimated by taking the six programs that produced effectiveness as a proportion of the 47 school-based CSE programs worldwide that measured effectiveness (i.e., a 12-month post-program effect on one of the key indicators), was six out of 47 or 13%. Inversely, 87% of the school-based CSE programs worldwide that measured effectiveness failed to show it.

HARMFUL PROGRAM IMPACT: Of the 103 school-based CSE studies worldwide, a total of 16 studies that evaluated 15 programs found 22 instances of negative/harmful CSE impact on teen sexual health or risk behavior (six programs produced multiple negative effects).⁵⁹ This was 16% (16/103) of the studies or 19% (15/79) of the school-based CSE programs globally that showed negative impact, proportions which are both higher than would be expected by chance.

CONCLUSIONS: When measured by credible criteria derived from the field of prevention research, a database containing 103 of the strongest and most recent CSE studies, vetted for research quality by three reputed scientific agencies (UNESCO, CDC and HHS), showed little evidence of CSE effectiveness in school settings and a concerning number of negative effects. Where there was some positive evidence, nearly all of it was produced by the program's developers and had not been replicated. Three decades of research indicate that CSE has not been an effective public health strategy in classrooms around the world and that too many programs may be doing harm. When applying the same standards of effectiveness to Abstinence Education (AE) in U.S. schools, the evidence—though limited—was more independent and looked more promising, enough to justify funding additional AE research.

Q&A - BC School Board Trustees Liability

The BC government is putting the onus on the School Boards because they themselves are attempting to avoid liability. This is opening up the Trustees to personal liability as outlined in Section 94 (2)(4) of the BC School Act.

<https://action4canada.com/wp-content/uploads/school-board-letter-vaccine-teachers-staff.pdf>

In a letter to its members addressing the Notices of Liability the BCSTA provides false information when advising that "trustees, employees and officers of a board are statutorily immunized from claims against them personally." Section 94 of the School Act was referenced but only in part.

The BCSTA neglected to include Section 94 (2) and (4) which defines when a defence is NOT provided and a board is NOT absolved from personal liability. According to the named Sections, trustees, officers, or employees of the board are not absolved of liability for any injuries sustained by a person due to dishonesty, gross negligence, malicious or wilful misconduct, or any injury arising out of a tort.
